

Amy Mumma has worked and taught in the international wine industry for more than 15 years. Currently she is teaching wine studies at the prestigious IAU College in Aix-en-Provence, France. Amy also works as a wine consultant for wineries who wish to sell their wines on the U.S. market. In addition, she is a private wine educator for professionals around the world who wish to come to France to learn about wine.

She was the Director and Founder of the Central Washington University Wine Program, which offers the only four year accredited Global Wine Studies degree in the United States. She was awarded the Professional Wine Woman 2005 and 2006 title in Paris at the International Wine Women Awards. She wrote and hosted a series of four wine educational DVDs that are distributed internationally.

Amy has a MBA in Wine Industry from the University of Bordeaux Business School, a Diploma of Tasting and Wine Studies from the University of Burgundy in Dijon, France, and the Advanced Certificate from the Wine and Spirit Education Trust in London. She has published numerous articles for the wine industry and written five books on wine ranging from viticulture and enology, wine regions, marketing, sensory analysis and wine faults. She was named Western Innovator 2008 by the Capital Press and was recognized by United States Representative Doc Hastings in the U.S. Congressional Record for service to the wine industry. Amy has been commended for her contributions to the industry by U.S. Senator Patty Murray and numerous State and Federal senators and representatives. She is a free-lance writer for publications including Vineyard & Winery Management and the North American correspondent for the Bordeaux wine magazine L'Amateur Bordeaux. Amy has judged numerous local, national and international wine competitions and is frequent presenter at national and international conferences. She assists wineries in wine quality evaluation and sales and marketing techniques. In addition, she works with private clients and corporations for wine tastings, evaluation, and investments.
